Special edition book produced by Nick Brandt with proceeds helping to save these beautiful animals.

Part of me was reluctant to tell people that these elephants had been killed. You want to believe these beautiful elephants are still wandering the African plains. But in a very short space of time, most of the large-tusked elephants featured in my books have been killed by poachers for their ivory with high demands from China and the Far East.

It's estimated that as many as 35,000 elephants are being poached a year. There are few lions left outside the national parks as they are being poisoned. Giraffes are being killed for bush meat and there are contracts out on zebras, as their skins are the latest fad in Asia. The rangers employed to patrol the Amboseli and Tanzania ecosystems are few and far between, and are drastically underfunded.

I simply can no longer watch this so I established my own non-profit organization - Big Life Foundation. The Foundation was conceived with a complete, comprehensive plan of action in place. Richard Bonham, one of the most experienced and highly respected conservationists in East Africa, is Big Life's Director of Operations in Africa. Donations have funded anti-poaching outposts along the border and anti-poaching teams brought in. A top anti-poaching training instructor has been hired and equipment and Landcruisers bought.

We're hoping to get the poaching under control in Amboseli as fast as we can, and then start approaching the issues long term, and further afield across East Africa. There is so much to be done to protect some of Africa's most magnificent wild animals from being all but wiped out in the near future.

It's a great start, and we are already making a difference, but can only do so with more donations.

Thanks for your time, I hope you enjoy my book.
